title: The Nieuwe Vismarkt
length: 30 seconds
date: 21/6/05

A man describes to us Emanuel de Witte's Dutch masterpiece "The Nieuwe Vismarkt".

MVO1: Well this is your basic, um, fish market in Amsterdam, and ah, you can see that 'cause there's a lot of... there's fish in it. And there's a woman she's selling fish. She's got a fish in one hand and she's sticking a metal rod up another large fish. And ah, there's some snooty looking aristocrat bloke with a curly wig with the little hankie tied around his neck. And I don't think he's going to be buying any fish from this woman quite frankly.

MVO2: The Dutch Masters from the Rijksmuseum. You really need to see them. Only at the National Gallery of Victoria 'til October 2nd.

A man describes to us Aelbert Cuyp's Dutch masterpiece "Landscape with Cattle".

MVO1: Okay, well it's a cloudy day. We've got two cows by a tree. Ah, one is fawn and the other looks to be brown - quite clearly. There's five sheep - ah they're white - and on the left, on left you've got, um, a peasant smiling brightly as he torments a very angry looking goat with a pole. Not sure why. And, and he's wearing ugh boots.

title: Woman at her Toilet
length: 30 seconds

A man describes to us Jan Steen's Dutch masterpiece "Woman at her Toilet".

MVO1: You've got a thick-set woman sitting on the edge of her bed. She's taking off some orange socks. The elastic has left indentations in her pasty, white legs. A spotty dog is sleeping on her pillow, and below it, there's a bedpan - like a full bedpan. A little too much information for me thank you very much "Jan Steen" from Amsterdam in 1626.
